NOTE BY THE COUNCIL OF THE IRISH TEXTS SOCIETY

In offering their congratulations to the Rev. F. E. Dunne, M.A., D.D., the Editor of the second Irish Texts Society, and to Mr. J.
H. Gwyn, M.A., and his staff, on the completion of their long and arduous task, and in doing so, the Council of the Irish Texts Society, wishes to acknowledge the valuable services rendered by the University of Oxford, and the Rev. Canon J. H. Gwyn, M.A., in the thousand pounds towards the cost of the work. Without the help it would have been impossible to have offered the work to the public at the small price of 15s. 6d. The Council also wish to acknowledge the kind help of all those friends who have contributed to the Irish Texts Society funds. A list of names will be published in the next report of the Society.

Signed on behalf of the Council,

Thomas Allen, Secretary
James F. O'Connell, Treasurer
Edward Byrne, J. H. Gwyn, M.A.

TO HONORABLE THE CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS

1904-1905

NOTE BY THE COUNCIL OF THE IRISH TEXTS SOCIETY.

IN offering their congratulations to the Rev. P. S. Dinneen, M.A., D.Litt., the Editor of the revised Irish Dictionary, and to Mr. L. S. Gogan, M.A., and his other assistants on the completion of their long and arduous task, and in thanking them for the courage and ardour which they have brought to bear upon it, the Council of the Irish Texts Society desire at the same time to acknowledge the goodwill shown towards the undertaking by the Government of Saorstát Eireann in voting, in the year 1924, the sum of one thousand pounds towards the cost of the work. Without this help, it would have been impossible to have offered the work to the public at the small price of 12s. 6d. The Council also wish to acknowledge the kind help of all those friends who have subscribed to the loan and donation funds. A list of names will be published in the next report of the Society.

Signed on behalf of the Council.

EDITOR'S PREFACE.

THE first edition of this Dictionary appeared, under my editorship, in 1904. The stereotype plates of that edition having been destroyed in the Dublin fires in 1916, the preparation of the present edition began the following year.

In this, the second edition, a page equal in capacity to about $1\frac{2}{3}$ pages of the first edition, has been employed, and the total number of pages amounts to 1372 as against some 820 pages of the first edition. By this means and by compression and word-grouping space has been found for about $2\frac{1}{2}$ times the amount of matter contained in the first edition.

As a complete re-casting of the book did not appear advisable, it seemed the safest, as well as the best, plan to follow in a general way the style and arrangement of the original work to which the public had grown accustomed and which had met with wide approval. The present edition is, however, practically a new work.

Though the scope and size of the book as well as the scattered and fragmentary character of much of the material precluded exhaustiveness, an effort has been made to net the chief living elements of the language while there was still time. The materials for the work have been drawn from the living language of Irish-speaking Ireland as well as from the written remains of the modern literature.

Early modern Irish has come in for an extra amount of attention, and occasional incursions have been made into still earlier strata of the language when it seemed profitable to do so, e.g., for the completion of word-series. Recently-minted words and forms, however, have been but sparingly admitted; though homage is paid, where possible, to the growth of the language as revealed in current literature.

The first edition was, to a considerable extent, compiled from memory. A large percentage of the illustrative phrases were taken from living expressions, conversations, etc., stored up in my childhood's memory; so that many of them have the vividness and directness characteristic of the spoken word. In this edition still further use has been made of this source; and the meanings and applications of key words, somatic terms, and other important expressions have been considerably expanded. In all such expansions Mr. Gogan's research ably supplemented my own efforts.

In the larger modern dictionaries of living tongues the illustrative and elucidatory passages quoted are usually chosen for other reasons than for that instinctive life which makes the spoken word the true seed of literature. In this dictionary the aim has been to select for quotation illustrative phrases and passages endowed with something of this deep and vital character of speech, the imaginative glow, the associative colour, that alone can reveal to the student the genius of the language.

The folk-lore, the habits and beliefs, the songs and tales, the arts and crafts of the people as well as the history, topography and antiquities of the country have been pressed into service to throw light on the meanings of words or to supply words or expressions not previously recorded.

As within the last few years, even while this book was in preparation, the Irish language has come to be widely studied and has taken a certain hold of the educational systems and commercial institutions of Ireland, such effort as was possible has been made to bring the dictionary into line with the requirements of the country in these directions. The wide and varied assortment of Irish words and phrases here presented will afford ample material for an extensive use of the language and for its application to social, commercial, scientific and literary pursuits. The principle of selection aimed at in the illustrative phrases, already referred to, tends to make these phrases instinct with life and suitable, with the development that cultivation brings, for the vivid and accurate expression of modern ideas. The snatches of poem and song occasionally quoted, though often a couple of centuries old, have lost little of their verve or freshness.

Local words of approved genuineness have been freely inserted. Loan words have been inserted when they have a footing in the language; such words frequently acquire a new shade of meaning. It is not desirable, however, to encourage the use of words only recently borrowed and for which there are good Irish equivalents, even if these latter have gone largely out of use. The borrowing of words is a recognised process in the growth and development of a language and can become a source of strength rather than of weakness if kept in judicious check, and especially if the borrowed element be assimilated by the aid of the syntax and inflexional system of the borrowing language.

As regards the connotations or meanings of the words, it may be said that few words in any language have a single simple signification. Most words, in addition to the basic meaning, have many shades and developments of meaning; in extreme examples a word may finally come to have a meaning which is the exact opposite of its original signification. The aim has been to give the basic meaning precedence and to set down the shades or changes of meaning in due sequence, as far as possible. In the early portions of the book these are grouped with the corresponding illustrative examples; in the later parts the meanings are all grouped at the beginning. In neither case, however, are these rules absolutely adhered to.

Owing to the lack of intensive cultivation, due to historical conditions, Irish orthography is somewhat more irregular than that of several European languages. In recent times attempts to report dialectic pronunciations more distinctly have, to some extent, intensified orthographical variations. In general a stable form is available and is here aimed at; the chief variants being given at the end of the connotation and often in cross-reference. The first edition of this work admittedly stabilised and, to a considerable extent, standardised orthographical usage, and this object has been kept steadily in view in preparing the present edition. The spoken and written languages though naturally closely allied are distinct; one is for the ear, and its form is subject to many variations; the other is for the eye, and necessarily demands a high standard of regularity. A letter silent in speech has often a useful part to play in preserving the historical sense relations between words. A recent and plausible modification, for example, is the termination -ú for -uḡaṑ; this, however, destroys the apparent link with the other verb endings (-uḡim, ḡc.) and the participle ending (-uḡte, ḡc.).

The orthography adopted, then, is generally that of the traditional usage, with certain accepted modifications; and is practically identical with that employed in the first edition. This has been widely accepted, and, perhaps, nowhere with more wholeheartedness than in the province of Ulster. It is believed that the interests of simplicity as well as of uniformity, a uniformity that affords a working basis even for dialectic variations, are best served by retaining the traditional orthography even in the verbal endings -uḡaṑ, -aṑ, ḡc.

It may be mentioned here that the long plural ending -(a)ṑe of the first edition has been replaced by -(a)ṑ except where it is actually the regular form; even then the short form may be often used; e.g.

βατα, -i, but ἀλαθ, -αθα (-αιθε) or -αι as also ἀιτα. A final convention in regard to the spelling of participles, n- groups, slender p- groups and final double consonants is, however, somewhat difficult to arrive at. Words like βάρρ, ρεάρρ, γc. have been accented throughout, although the double consonant seems a sufficient indication of the nature of the vowel sound. Triphthongs and the diphthong eo are not accented; eó (glide and ó) in the latter case being the usual pronunciation, the only exceptions being θεός, λεογαίμ, ρeo and one or two other words.

Irish, especially Irish poetry, is rich in compound words. The compounds are in fact composed ad libitum, even in everyday speech. In the early parts of the book compounds are usually given as separate words. From, say, O onwards they are as a rule grouped, especially where they occur in large numbers. The method of registry in this case also varies. Usually they are alphabetically arranged; sometimes they are classified (see nearm-). It has been, however, difficult to recognise a principle in regard to the palatalisation of the first element of the compound. Palatalised and non-palatalised forms are common in good texts and in local usage; and writers may often find it convenient to give both elements without change, as mí-náipe for mío-náipe, teač-rcéai for teit-rcéai, γc.

In Irish, as in other inflectional languages, there is a tendency to generalise oblique forms, e.g. τiς or τoiς for τεαč, ρeiu for ρeaiu; in large tracts of Connemara it is now usual to say coiρ, muc, iám, γc. for cor, muc, iám, γc. In the dictionary, however, the normal form is the one usually given.

In the presence of conflicting literatures the selected form has been based on etymological data where available (thus: víρ from English vice rather than bíoir, and gúir or gúir rather than gumair, the first mentioned occurring in the "Táin"), and otherwise on simplicity of form or on general usage. On the other hand, no reasonable objection can be raised against the passing into general use of such forms as gnár, tlar, γc. Such reductions are well within the limits of simplification and development inherent in the language itself. Such exceptions are, in the main, rare. Isolated cases, e.g. cpánairé for corpánairé are common but do not merit permanent recognition.

In the large assortment of material here presented there are, naturally, uncertain elements on which the last word has by no means been said. For several reasons, among which is the disappearance of the neuter gender from the modern language, the gender of certain Irish substantives varies between masculine and feminine both in spoken and written usage. In these pages the solution of such problems, which the available evidence seemed to warrant, has been given. The etymological conjectures, which have been sparingly inserted, will, it is hoped, have the effect of stimulating inquiry into doubtful matters.

It should be observed that words or phrases to which a district has been assigned are not necessarily confined to that district, and that words, etc., assigned to a province or wide area are not necessarily co-extensive in use with these areas.

It is believed that the connotations generally, and especially those of the more important and fundamental words, are as full and as fully illustrated by examples as it is desirable to make them in a work like this.

Besides the numerous tales, tracts, poems, etc., that have been explored in the preparation of this work, it has been computed that more than 300 vocabularies, earlier and modern, printed and in manuscript, have been searched for the greater part of the book.

An effort has been made to secure as much representative provincial Irish in word and phrase as possible. Dr. Myles Dillon, Mr. O'Donnell of Newport, and many others, have supplied useful gleanings of Connaught (North and South) and Aran words and phrases. I have myself been constantly conversing with Irish-speaking emigrants from Connaught of whom a steady stream is constantly visiting Dublin. Moreover Mr. Gogan, by conviction, is partial to certain Connaught word-forms. Several distinguished Ulstermen, natives of North- and Mid-Ulster, have by their contributions helped to insure an adequate representation for the Northern dialect. Nor have the dialects of Meath, Omeath, or the Glens of Antrim been neglected. The Irish of the Comeragh district of Waterford has been well explored by Fr. McGrath and Mr. Weldon; and Dr. Sheehan's "Sean-Caint na nOéire" has done much for the Decies generally. A host of able collectors have all but exhausted West- and North-West Kerry Irish (mainland and insular) and in this connection Fr. Clune's "Réitíní Óir" deserves mention. The Ballyvourney "Four Masters," whose names are given elsewhere, together with Canon O'Leary and others, well represent the Irish of Muskerry or Mid-Cork. South and South-West Cork and Kerry are also well to the front. The Irish of Clare and West Limerick has several exponents. Even from those counties and districts in which the tide of Irish has ebbed words and phrases have been obtained. It will thus appear that no corner of Ireland has been left unexplored, though it is not pretended that nothing has been left for other workers to glean; rather should it be understood that the dictionary will be a convenient starting point for future gleaners in the fields of words, phrases and folk-lore in Irish. Care has been taken, however, not to accentuate the undoubted dialectic differences that exist and for which stress and intonation largely account. Omissions and errors which readers may notice will be gratefully received by the Editor.

The advice and extensive learning of Mr. L. S. Gogan, M.A., N.U.I., Assistant Keeper, Irish Antiquities, National Museum, were available during the greater part of the preparation of the work; but more especially during the last four or five years has he laboured with unflagging energy and zeal in the work of revision, transcription, arrangement and research to an extent impossible to my single effort. He came to my aid when the pressure of the work was at its height and when the mass of material by its very extent threatened to prove unmanageable by a single worker, and his ardour has proved inextinguishable; and not I alone, but the wide circle for whom this book is intended, owe him a debt of gratitude for his sustained patriotic effort.

The Rev. Denis O'Flynn, B.A., N.U.I., of the Archdiocese of Dublin, rendered valuable aid in proof-reading and in other directions, devoting to the work with patriotic zeal for three or four years whatever time and energy he could spare from his ecclesiastical studies. Miss Eileen Harnett, M.A., N.U.I., of the French Faculty of the National University, gave much assistance in the work of compilation in its earlier stages. Some assistance was also given with good will by Very Rev. P. Woulfe, P.P., and Mr. Séamas O Casaide, M.A. Special thanks are hereby tendered to Mrs. Máire Gogan, Miss Cecilia Geoghegan, Miss Louise O'Flynn, Miss Kathleen Goodfellow, for assistance, generously given, in various directions.

I am also under obligation to the kind and courteous staffs of the National Library of Ireland, and the National Museum.

During the progress of the work many useful suggestions from the Council of the Irish Texts Society, on whom, as on myself, the work has been a heavy burthen, reached me through their Honorary Secretary, Mr. T. D. FitzGerald, for which I am deeply grateful.

Finally, I gladly bear testimony to the ability and insight with which the excellent staff of Messrs. Sealy, Bryers and Walker, the printers, handled the work throughout.

I am grateful to the following for special interest taken in the book:—Rev. Lawrence Murray (Archdiocese of Armagh); Cú ULAD (Mr. Peter McGinley); Mr. Henry Morris; ΔΙΟΤΩΜΙΝ ΜΑC ΞΗΕΔΣΟΙΡ; Mr. Delargey; Mr. J. J. Buckley (Acting Director, National Museum, Dublin); Dr. Myles Dillon; Mr. MacDonald (South Africa); ΜΙCΕΑΙ Ο ΘΡΙΑΙΝ; CONCUBAR Ó DEARMÚNA; ΜΙCΕΑΙ Ο ΛΟΙΝΞΡΙΞ; ΤΑΘΞ Ó ΡΙΟΞΒΑΡΘΑΙΝ; SEÁN MAC MURCADA CAOMÁNAC. Prof. T. O Máille, University College, Galway, kindly lent me proofs of his interesting work “Urlabhraidheacht.” Fr. Denis O’Flynn, besides furnishing me with word-lists, kindly drew my attention to Fr. O’Growney’s annotated “O’Reilly’s Dictionary” in Maynooth College.

As regards deceased contributors I wish to make special and grateful mention of Dr. E. C. Quiggin, Fr. McGrath, Mr. Robert Weldon, Mr. P. Ferriter, and Mr. J. C. Ward.

Lists of words, phrases, etc., of varying scope and extent were obtained from:—His Ex. T. M. Healy; Right Rev. Abbot of Mount Melleray; Very Rev. Canon Breen, Killarney; Very Rev. Canon MacDermott, P.P. (Diocese of Elphin); Rev. Fr. Courtney (Kerry); Mr. James Fenton; Mr. Michael Breen, Castleknock (North-East Kerry words); Mr. Justice Forde (chiefly ornithological words); Dr. Douglas Hyde; Prof. T. F. O’Rahilly; Dr. John P. Mac Enri; Mr. Charles MacNeill; ΡΕΑΘΑΡ Ó ΘΟΥΘΑ (chiefly Omeath and Mid-Ulster words); SÉAMAR Ó SÚILLEABÁIN (South Kerry); Mr. Thomas Forde, Dublin (words from the Tuam—Claregalway district); Rev. Fr. Cussen, O.P., M.A.; Mr. P. Mac Sweeney (Waterford words); ΤΟΜΑΡ Ó CONCEANAINN; Mr. P. O’Donnell, Newport, Co. Mayo; ΕΟΞΑΝ Ó ΝΕΑCΤΑΙΝ; Mr. John Hogan, Inchicore (embodying extracts from MS. remains of the late Mr. John Glynn of Tuam); Miss Geraldine Griffin (words kindly selected by her from current journals and magazines); Mr. Honan, Bray (Clare words); Mr. M. McEnry (Mayo words); ΡΑΘΡΙΑC Ó ΘΟΜΝΑΤΙΔΑΙΝ (late editor “ΨΑΙΝΝΕ ΔΗ ΛΑΕ”); ΘΟΜΝΑΤΙ Ó ΞΡΙΑΝΝΑ; Mr. J. J. Doyle; Mr. Denis Dinneen; Mr. J. J. Farrelly.

From the above list no name not given in the list of References has been advertently omitted.

Use has also been made of some of the lists obtained in the prize competition instituted by the Council of the Irish Texts Society some years ago. The Gaelic League Oireachtas tales, etc., were not available for use except to a limited extent.

This will in all likelihood be my last work for the Irish Texts Society. In this respect I may consider myself as "donatum jam rude." I sometimes think of that Society as a distinctive university unchartered and unendowed, in which, though unworthy, I have been filling a "Chair" since the year 1900 when they published my editio princeps of O'Rahilly, in which I had kind assistance from Prof. Bergin. That work was followed by the first edition of this dictionary (1904); by Vols. II. and III. (the late Mr. Comyn having edited Vol. I.) of Keating's History (1908); by a Smaller Irish-English Dictionary (1910); by a revised edition of O'Rahilly, edited in conjunction with Prof. O'Donoghue (1911); and by Vol. IV. of Keating's History (1914), and the present work (1927). On these volumes, eight in all, I reckon that, led by the lure and prompted by the pathos of unfinished or undeveloped undertakings, I have expended twenty years of severe labour, ten continuous years of which have been devoted to the present volume, and fourteen in all to lexicographical work. The holder of a "Chair" is expected not only to produce work useful to the public but also to stimulate alumni to follow up or surpass his efforts:

Ignem ejus scintillam ipse dedisti

Flagrantem late et rapientem cuncta videbis.

In this I have been favoured. The volumes in question have certainly been widely used. And to name only Prof. O'Donoghue, Mr. J. H. Lloyd, and Mr. J. J. O'Kelly among my earlier helpers, I can now point to Mr. Gogan and Fr. O'Flynn whose ability and enthusiasm in the cause of Irish learning are capable of scaling heights entirely beyond my reach.

It is pleasant to observe that my old friends, Miss Eleanor Hull, as Secretary to the Council, and Dr. Hyde, as President of the Irish Texts Society, are still at their posts, as in 1900, when my "O'Rahilly" appeared.

AIDS TO PRONUNCIATION.*

In the tables which follow an effort has been made to represent the sounds of Irish letters and combinations of letters in terms of English sounds, as English is spoken generally in Ireland. Of course perfect equivalence is not always attained. Thus broad t as in lá is more guttural than l in law and closely resembles ll as in hollow.

Slender n as in cuir is not found in English except, perhaps, in a word like Bert(ie) (in Irish-English).

To speak generally, the difference between broad and slender consonants is a strong characteristic of Irish speech.

The diphthongs and triphthongs in Irish are, in several instances, not paralleled in English.

In parts of Connaught, especially the neighbourhood of Achill and North Mayo, the sound of o slender approaches that of dg as in judge; thus curo is pronounced something like cuidge.

Similarly u slender, cf. ceasarc pronounced chaggasc.

The o sound in oel, in Galway and South Mayo, is like d in due, dew, as generally pronounced in Ireland, and differs from the sound of d in din which represents the Munster o slender and from the N. Mayo sound of o slender which is like dg in judge.

Similarly ae, ao, have variations of sound in Munster, Connaught and Ulster.

- b slender as in treib, like v in vain.
- c as in pluic, like ch in loch (Irish pron.); final c slender pron. like h as in ceic (pron. deh), al. sometimes between vowels as plúce pron. fihi.
- ó initial like y in yore and in M. often resembling gh.
- ó final like w, or v or oo, or silent, sometimes like g in beg.
- ó in body of word is oft. pronounced like ʒ as in maoróda.
- f silent but sometimes like h as in mé féin.
- ʒ initial like y in yore, and in M. often resembling gh.
- ʒ final like w or v or oo, or silent; sometimes like g in beg; it resembles v in oo toiʒ ré (toiʒ), ʒc.
- m broad like w as máoin pronounced ween.
- m slender like v in vine as an éireoin (gs.).
- p like p.
- p like h or c slender as in teabar Séain (M. local), oo fuabairinn, but teabar Séamair, has ʒ = H.
- t like h.
- ó initial slender like y in yeon.
- ó initial broad as in Δ óine, like y in young and oft. resembling gh.
- ʒ initial slender same as ó initial slender.
- ʒ initial broad as in Δ ʒolta, same as ó initial broad.

Eclipsed Letters.

- b is eclipsed by m as na mbán;
- c is eclipsed by ʒ as na ʒuac;
- o is eclipsed by n as na nóán;
- f is eclipsed by b as na bfeair;
- ʒ is eclipsed by n as na nʒmár;
- p is eclipsed by b as na bpian;
- t is eclipsed by o as na otonn.

Only the eclipsing letter is pronounced except in the case of nʒ which is sounded somewhat like ng in thing, song, etc.

Difficult sounds of letters and combinations of letters.—These include o and p slender, l and n broad, t broad and slender already dealt with.

Δ and o before m, nn, ll, or nʒ, esp. in monosyllables and often before nt and nc are sounded in M. like ou in round; also o before ó and ʒ; but this pronunciation does not hold when the m, nn, ʒc. are followed immediately by a vowel, thus lom (llowm), but lomao (lloma).

ao and ax are sounded generally like i in lime; cf. axao, maoiric, maíom.

ao terminating a verbal is pron. generally Δ, sometimes oo.

ao in perf. passive is pronounced variously as uʒ or ax, uw or uw, oo, uch, as (oo) lomao (é) pronounced llomug or llomag, llomuv, llomuw, llomoo, llomuch (stress always on penult.). These variations, or most of them, are found within comparatively small areas; M. however favours uʒ or ax and Con. uw, uw.

ao termination of 3rd sing. imperfect act. is pron. ax, u (ach, uch) M., uw (Con., etc.).

ol is sounded like ll as in colao, róla.

ln is sounded like ll as colna pronounced colla.

on is sounded as nn as céona pronounced céanna (cianna M.).

Two liquids or a liquid and a mute generally do not coalesce as veapɿs pronounced veapɿs; pealtɿ pronounced pealtɿ.

Final e following an unaspirated consonant is always pronounced.

Such words as cpior̄e are monosyllables, but the archaic pronunciation as two syllables is maintained in syllabic verse.

Stress and intonation account for a good deal of the differences between the three main dialects of Irish. Thus apán is stressed on the final syllable in M.; in Con. the stress is on the first syllable but the second remains long; in U. the stress is on the first syllable and the second is only short.

Words like mapcaé, bacac have the stress on the final syllable in M., but in the gs. mapcaíḡ, bacacíḡ the stress is shifted to the first syllable.

The obscurity of sound of short vowels is to be noted, thus pcéaltu so far as sound goes might be written pcéaltu, pcéalto; similarly tupup, tupap, tupop.

to and ea are pron. identically in unstressed syllables of words of more than one syllable.

The lists given below will help the student by fixing more or less accurately the values of Irish letters and combinations of letters.

(1) The following Irish words have English words of the same sound but of different meaning placed opposite to them. In some cases the equivalence of sound is absolute, as bím = beam; in other cases there is a slight discrepancy arising chiefly from the quality of the consonants but sometimes from the quality of the vowels:—

| | | | |
|------------------------|--------------------------|------------------------|-------------------------|
| mac | mock | meap | mass |
| ap | ass, as(p) | teap | lass |
| baɾ | boss | peal | shall |

| iaɾɾ | ear | tuic | hit |
| roc | shook | boḡa | bough |
| ɾuim | seem | cómaɾi | core |

| | | | |
|--------------|-------------------------|----------------------|-------------------------------|
| τέιξιμ | tame | ᾱδῶν (gpl.) | gown |
| (nΔ) τιῖε | dee | βεῖν | ban |
| τινν (τεινν) | tying (as one syllable) | (Δ) ἡδῶιν | ween |
| (ρεδρ) τιῖε | tea | (ι n-) ἄῖδῶ (Δν λαε) | eye (smi. ὁ pron. g) |
| οῦδρ | our | ῥᾶτ Δ βείλ | raw a vale |
| ἀοῦδρ | our | ῥᾶτ Δ βείλ | raw a bale |

(2) The following English words are spelled according to the sounds of Irish letters; in several instances more than one combination of Irish letters will give the sound:—

| | | | |
|--------|--------------|----------|----------|
| ire | οιῦεδρ | peace} | πίορ |
| fire | ῥᾶτρ | piece } | |

After nouns the genitive singular and nominative plural are given; other cases, as required; after verbs (which are given in the 1st person singular, indicative mood), the verbal is given; after adjectives, the genitive singular feminine, which is in general the same as the comparative and superlative; many adjectives, from the nature of the case, are not used in the comparative or superlative, but are nevertheless declined in the positive degree; after compound nouns, the genitive and plural endings are not given when they are identical with those of the terminal simple nouns, and compound adjectives are not in general declined.

The general rule followed in setting down the inflectional termination after words is to repeat the last letter of the invariable portion of the word, thus bronntóir, -óir, -óirí, signifies that the genitive case of bronntóir is bronntóir, and its nominative plural is bronntóirí; where, however, the inflectional termination is purely an addition to the noun, the last letter is generally not repeated, thus fuad, -a, signifies that fuada is the genitive case of fuad. The slight deviations from this method which occasionally occur will be readily understood.

Δ

Δ (Δίμ, elm, etc.), the first letter of the Modern Irish Alphabet; smt. interchanges with ο, εα, ιο, υ, e.g., ἀμαρ, ιομαρ, ομαρ, υμαρ; ἀραιρ, εαραιρ; Δι, υι, ei al. interchange, as do Δι, δε, Δο, Δοι, Δι, Δο; smt. initial Δ is dropped, as Δ(τύρ)ησε or has ρ prefixed, as (ρ)άραιμ; smt. both forms subsist, as ἀναιμ, παναιμ; smt. it is pref. to χοιρὸς, μιὰμ, γς., through analogy; is smt. separated incorrectly from verb of which it is a part, as Δοειρ (Δ οειρ).

Δ, particle used before numerals when they do not qualify nouns, as Δ ἕαον, one, the number one; Δ κύις, five; βλιαδῶιν Δ ἑάο, the year one hundred; υιμῖν Δ ρέ, number six; τραιν Δ ρεάτ, the seven o'clock train.

Δ, interj., aspir., precedes voc. case, sing. and pl., often slurred over in pronunciation; silent before vowel or ρ and somet. not written, being replaced by an apostrophe or simply omitted; smt. Eng. O, though not an equivalent, represents it; Δ ρῖν ἀν ράιννε, O man of the ring; Δ ράοραις, O Patrick; εἰρτῶ, Δ ὅαοιμε, listen, O people; Δ μῖς, my son; the usage, Δ μ' ἀναιμ, my soul! is exceptional.

Δ, poss. a. (1) her, its (f.) prefixes h- to vowels; (2) his, its (m.) aspirates; (3) their, eclipses, prefixes n- to vowels; Δ ἑανν, his head; Δ ἑανν, her head; Δ γςινν, their heads; Δ h-οβαιρ, her work; Δ οβαιρ, his work; Δ n-οβαιρ, their work; it introduces the demonstrative, Δ λειτέρῳ ρῖν οε ὅννε, such a person; oft. used proleptically, e.g., Δγυρ Δ ρῖορ ἀγε γο ραβαρ ἀνν, he knowing that I was there; ní maic liom Δ ράο γο βρῖλ, γς., I do not like to say that, etc.; ιρ οεαцаρ Δ μεαρ γυρ, it is hard to think that, etc.; τά Δ λάν (λῑάτ) οαοιμε ἀνν, there is a (its) large number of people there; with abstracts, Δγυρ Δ λῑονμῑρ ιρ μαρ βῑοταρ, seeing these were so numerous; ní beas liom Δ ḡainne, I think it is scarce enough; used with τρῖν, οεατρῑρ, γς.; ιαο Δ οτ., all three of them; ἑαδῶταρ Δ οτ. ἀνν, the three went there (now largely written ιι in this sense and regarded as a prep.); in phr. like οεαμῑν (=οον οεαμῑν) Δ ἑαοιλε, nothing slenderer, no slenderer.

Δ, pseudo-relative particle, followed by aspiration which alone may represent the relativity; ἀν ρεαρ (Δ) ἑυρεανν, ἀν ρεαρ (Δ) ἑυρεαρ, he who puts; better written οο, ἀν ρεαρ οο ἑυρεανν; cf. οο ἑυρ ρέ, he put, and ιρ ἑεῑν Δ ἑυρ ἀν λεαβαρ ἑγḡam, it was John who sent me the book, where Δ should be οο.

Δ, rel. prn., eclipsing, ἀρ with pret., (1) who, what, all, those, whosoever, all who (whom), all which, all that; as subj. or obj.; βαῖνεανν Δ βρῖλ ἀγḡm λεατ, what I have is yours; βειρῑμ Δ βρῖλ ἀγḡm ουιτ, I give you all I have; Δ οτάνις ιρ Δ οτῑορφαῖο, those who have come or will come; (2) after or in conjunction with prep., ἀν ρεαρ λε n-Δ (or lé) mbím, the man with whom I usually am; ἀν ρεαρ Δ mbím (or γο mbím) λειρ, id.; ἑαρ Δ βρῑα ριαμ, compared with everything I have ever seen; οαρ Δ βρῖλ beo, by the living; bean Δ βρῑαγḡαῖο κυρ οά cláinn báρ, a woman who might have lost some of her children; smt. with n- prefixed; ἀν ρεαρ n-Δ mbíοῖο ὅρ ἀιγε, he who used have gold; oft. omitted, as: bean mbeaḡ mile bó aici, a woman having a thousand cows; Δ mḡairḡ βρῖλ mo ḡrῑοῖο ιοννατ, O M., you who have my heart; with preps.: λε n-Δ or lé, ρά n-Δ or ρά, ó n-Δ or ó, ι n-Δ or ι, τρῑ n-Δ or τρῑ, οο n-Δ and οά, οε n-Δ and οά, ἀρ Δ, ἀρ Δ, ταρ Δ, οαρ Δ; (3) when, where; ἀν lá ὅο Δ ογḡαρ, that day when you gave; ἀν áιτ Δ βρῖλ ρέ, where he is (cf. ι, ιν). See γο and ἀρ.

Δ. See ι prep.

ἄν, indef. pron., one, a single one, only, the only (oft. with ἄνάν); the one, the same, any; with neg.
 οὐ, none, not any; ἄν ἢ τίς, any;
 ἄν ἀν τίς, twenty-one; ἄν
 οὐνε, ἄν νεαί, any one, anybody;
 with neg., no one, nobody; ἄν . . . ἄλλο, another; ἄν λά ἄνάν, one day, once upon a time; ἄν τίς, anything, with neg., nothing; ἄν ὡς, ἄν ὡς ἄνάν, once, once upon a time; ἄν ὡς, together, both, all; ἄν ὡς, along with, together with; ἄν ὡς, ἄν ὡς, every one. ἄν is sometimes stressed, and forms one word with the following nouns, as: ἄν ὡς ἄν ἄν ὡς-ἄν, we both attended the same school; ὡς-ἄν, unanimously

but it is not stressed in phrases like ní haon maíteap uirt beir as cannt, there is no use in your talk; ní'l aḡam áct don pèilling amáin, I have but a single shilling, and should then be regarded as a separate word. The accentuation of don takes place when emphasis is to be laid on the singleness, unity, or identity of the idea conveyed by the following word: thus, ní'l don bñíḡ leir an bpocal raim, that word has no meaning, but doin-bñíḡ ir ead an uá pocal, both words have one and the same meaning. In the first of these two sentences don is not emphasised, and should not form one word with bñíḡ. If the word amáin follow in the sentence it sometimes takes the emphasis off don. Don was in the 16th century, and is in modern times, often written éan, and in compounds doin becomes éin. An objection to these forms is this, that frequently in poetry don has to be pronounced doin (with broad n), which is a recognised sound of do in Con. and U., but the spelling éan does not lend itself to that sound; in sense of any, with or without neg. it may be used with plural nouns; ní'l rmaáct ar don ḡarrúnaiḡ aḡam-ra, I have not authority over any boys; indef. prn. anyone, one; ḡan a. im' cómair, no one being with me.

Don, g. doin, pl. -nta, m., the ace at cards; a chief; a point or score; one individual; one, the number one; an τ-don úo 'r an tóir, the one and the pair, the three (O'Ra.); state of being by one's-self; 'na don, 'na haon, he (she) by himself (herself) alone; mar don, gc., as a person who, etc.; don marb, a blank score, fig. an unsuccessful effort, a failure.

Don, g. doin, pl. -nta, m., what is separate, or prominent, as a breast, etc.; donca cnuinne géapa, round, well-formed breasts (poet.); a step of a stair; in pl. applied to shelves or corbels in the masonry supported by the cláðar (which see) with a view to narrowing or making more slender the wall for the chimney; rímnéróeada na n-donta, chimneys with shelved masonry (poet. By.) See cúl-don.
